

The Third Sunday after Epiphany, also known as "Baptism of Our Lord Sunday," is a Christian holiday that falls on the Sunday immediately after the Feast of the Epiphany. The Epiphany, which is celebrated on January 6th, commemorates the visit of the Magi to the baby Jesus and the revelation of Jesus as the Son of God to the Gentiles.

On the Third Sunday after Epiphany, churches often focus on the theme of baptism and the role it plays in the Christian faith. In the Bible, Jesus is baptized by John the Baptist in the River Jordan, and it is at this moment that God declares Jesus to be his Son. As Christians, we believe that through baptism, we too are adopted as children of God and given new life in Christ.

During worship services on this Sunday, many churches will perform baptisms, reaffirm baptismal vows, or have a special emphasis on the sacrament of baptism. It is also a time for Christians to reflect on their own baptisms and the ways in which they have been called to live out their faith.

In summary, Third Sunday after Epiphany is a Christian holiday that commemorates the revelation of Jesus as the Son of God and the sacrament of baptism. It is a time for Christians to reflect on their own faith and their own baptism and the way they live it out.
